RE: PR DOCKET 92-235 REFARMING

Gentlemen:

There are a number of technical considerations that I could comment on concerning refarming, but I will leave them for another day. I wish you to consider a more practical problem. Who is going to pay for implementations?

If I agreed with everything you planned to do my unit of government could not afford to implement. Do you suggest I raise taxes? Do you suggest that states reimburse us when the federal government is reducing income to states? Mandating government to change, but not supplying revenues to allow the change to occur is irresponsible and another example of how the federal government does not care about deficit spending.

Please be responsible. Do not make changes without seeing that resources are available to implement the change.

Sincerely,

John Baricevic
